THE THROUGH-LINE

Different subjects. Different audiences. The same writing problem: understand the material, find what matters, and make it clear enough that someone wants to keep reading.

01 • COMMERCIAL TREATMENTS + CREATIVE PRODUCTION

Role: Creative Producer / Writer, @dolescent

The work: Commercial director-treatment writing, scripts, educational media and digital storytelling.

The challenge: Turn briefs, boards, visual references and director input into persuasive narrative language that communicates tone, story, casting and visual approach.

- Worked from multiple creative inputs rather than a blank page—synthesizing source material into one coherent voice.
- Adapted language to the audience and purpose of each piece while collaborating through feedback and revision.
- Connected writing to production realities, helping ideas survive the move from concept to execution.

PBI-Gordon relevance: brief-driven copywriting, synthesis, audience awareness, collaboration and the ability to learn the subject before deciding how to say it.

02 • PUBLIC COMMUNICATION

Role: Speechwriter, Office of Congresswoman Nancy Boyda

The work: Speeches and public communications built from policy, research and background material.

The challenge: Make complicated, fact-dependent information understandable and memorable without losing accuracy or the speaker's voice.

- Translated dense source material into language intended to be heard and understood by broad audiences.
- Adjusted tone, structure and level of detail for different audiences, occasions and communication goals.
- Worked under deadline where factual accuracy and clarity were not optional.

PBI-Gordon relevance: technical-to-accessible writing, research, fact discipline, voice and audience adaptation.

03 • RESEARCH + EDITORIAL DEVELOPMENT

Role: Graduate Writing Consultant / English Instructor

Settings: University of Kansas, ITT Technical Institute and Highland Community College

The work: Graduate theses and dissertations, academic writing, composition instruction and curriculum/content development.

- Worked one-on-one with subject-matter experts whose disciplines were often outside my own.
- Helped writers clarify complex arguments and specialized information without changing the underlying meaning.
- Edited for structure, logic, grammar, voice and reader comprehension; developed instructional content for composition courses.

PBI-Gordon relevance: collaborating with experts, asking useful questions, editing technical material and respecting subject-matter accuracy.

04 • THE BRASS TEAPOT

Role: Screenwriter / Story; current stage-musical book co-writer

The work: A high-concept story developed into a produced feature film and later rebuilt for a different medium and audience.

- Carried a central concept through extensive development, revision and production.
- Performed real-time rewriting and story problem-solving during production.
- Currently adapting the material for the stage, requiring major restructuring while preserving the core idea and voice.

Why it belongs here: it demonstrates sustained revision, conceptual discipline, voice and the ability to reframe the same underlying material for a new format.

05 • RANGE: LOST CHILD + PUBLISHED WORK

Lost Child: Co-writer of a produced feature film with a markedly different tone from The Brass Teapot, demonstrating the ability to change voice and approach for the needs of the material.

Published fiction: “Prehistory,” Silent Voices (2005); “The Good Nights When My Father Died,” Reed Magazine (2007), later reprinted in Last Writes (2009).

Research-based work: Leaves of Words, a produced full-length play developed from extensive reporting and source research into the unresolved disappearance of Randy Leach.

PBI-Gordon relevance: range is useful only when it serves the assignment. These projects show research, tonal flexibility, long-form organization and a willingness to revise until the form fits the material.

HOW I WORK

- Start with the source material, not the clever line.
- Ask questions until I understand what the expert means—and what the audience actually needs to know.
- Find the clearest organizing idea and choose a voice appropriate to the brand, audience and medium.
- Draft, test, cut and revise. I am comfortable receiving detailed notes and rebuilding work when the better solution emerges.
- Treat accuracy and readability as partners rather than competing goals.
